

[GB] New consolidated television licence fee regulations

IRIS 1997-3:1/23

*David Goldberg
deejee Research/Consultancy*

On 12 February 1997, the Secretary of State for National Heritage laid new consolidated television licence fee regulations before both Houses of Parliament. Apart from bringing into effect the new level of television licence fees from 1 April 1997 (£91.50 for colour and £30.50 for black and white), the regulations, (i) "extend coverage of a television licence to permit installation and use of television in any mobile home, static or touring caravan, or other vehicle or vessel used by members of the household, subject to certain provisions, and (b) "fulfil the Government's undertaking to stop sheltered housing schemes from being disqualified from the concessional television licence arrangements simply because a small number of units within them have been purchased under the right-to-buy provisions of the Housing Act 1985"

New consolidated television licence fee regulations. House of Commons Hansard Written Answers for 12 February 1997.

