

[GB] Broadcasting Closed-circuit Footage May Have Privacy Implications

IRIS 1998-1:1/24

*David Goldberg
deejee Research/Consultancy*

The High Court decided on 25 November that it was neither unlawful nor irrational for the owner of a closed-circuit television system (in this case a local authority) to release footage to the media for the purpose of showing how successful the system was in the prevention and detection of crime. However, the judge recognised that there might be "undesirable invasions of a person's privacy." In this case, a man's face was identified by family and friends as it was inadequately masked. The judge proposed that, until the European Convention on Human Rights had been fully incorporated into law, reliance should be had on guidance being issued in codes of practice. Such a Code has been published by the Local Government Information Unit.

Local Government Information Unit, A watching brief: A code of practice for CCTV Local

